Rust: Death and Life

Dear Friends:

This is another zine of a series of publications that I have done in this genre in order to publicize my work in photography.

This time, it is a collection of 12 color photographs made in Paranapiacaba, SP-Brazil during on the occasion of the city's photography festival held on September 15 and 16, 2018.

This zine deals with photos of old train cars parked on a stretch of long-standing railway line.

The title refers to a feeling that struck me during the photo sessions on the resurgence of life from 'death'. Corrosion, ruthless, destroys, "kills" these machines of steel, and corrosion, rust, life arises in the form of small plants that grow and flourish abundantly from the almost complete dissolution of these pieces. It is a 'real laboratory of studies on the electrochemistry of corrosion', a fundamental discipline for undergraduate and graduate students in Chemistry.

In summary, the above-mentioned feeling has to do with the fact that the atmospheric oxygen we breathe and keeps us alive (21% of oxygen in the atmosphere), is that same oxygen that, destroying (killing) these machines and wagons through corrosion, generates nutrients for the development of various life forms on these decomposing materials. It's death that creates life.

I hope you like the photographs and the story behind this zine.
